Government Machinery Set in Motion to Investigate Alleged Diverting of Shipments

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25 (By The Associated Press)-The machinery of the Federal Government has been set in motion to ascertain whether any foreign embassies and legations have brought into the country excessive shipments of liquor to be diverted later into the bootleg trade in the national capital.

As a result of recent disclosures by the Washington police, who charge openly that some foreign envoys are using their diplomatic immunity to supply bootleggers, the Treasury Department has sent a memorandum to the State Department which is under-stood to call attention to "certain unusual shipments" of liquor to embas-sies and legations.

Large Shipments

While no formal protest concerning the shipments was made, Treasury officials said several shipments in recent weeks were of such magnitude as to attract the attention of prohibition enforcement officers. The Treasury was represented as believing that more liquor was coming in than was "reasonably required" by the staffs of the foreign representatives.

The Treasury appeared to be in the dark as to what action, if any, could be taken. It was said that at any rate all the Treasury could do would he to direct the State Department's attention to the situation.

It was believed in some quarters that the State Department's only power lay in suggesting to the for-eign diplomatists that the shipments appeared too large and were causing

PARIS PUTS STOP TO SLAVE TRAFFIC IN WEST AFRICA

Decree Sent to League of Nations Indicates Steps Taken to Suppress Slavery

A thorough investigation of alleged maladministration in Togoland, a secluded territory on the west coast of Africa, which is under mandats to France has been made by The Christian Science Monitor. In view of the action of the French Government in dealing with the suppression of slavery the results of the investigation printed below are of special interest.

GENEVA. Swizerland, Jan. 25-The French Government has communicated to the secretariat of the League of Nations the text of a decree concerning Togoland, which is under a French mandate, dealing with the suppression of slavery in French West Africa and the French Congo. Anyone making a contract depriving a third person of personal liberty will be punished by two to five years' imprisonment and a fine of from 500 to 5000 francs, such an attempt being considered the equivalent of crime.

Out of the former German colony of Togoland-now under French mandate—there has come to The Chris tian Science Monitor a remarkable story of colonial administration in the allied delegations and their staffs one of the most obscure of the terare making all arrangements, includ- ritories governed since the war by mandate to an allied power. A tiny strip of land—52,200 square miles in area—Togoland is scarcely discoverable on the map, sandwiched in on the west coast of Africa, between the British Gold Coast on the west and French Dahomey on the east and north.

Though comparatively insignificant in extent, this colony formed a vital part of the territorial wedge which Bismarck sought to drive—west to east—across the continent. In fact, it was not until 1884—after the wild scramble among European powers for made drastic objections and carried African territory was well under way the day by threatening the wrath of —that German agents began to establish stations along the coast. But the German flag—first authorized to fly "In dealing with Orientals," said the informant, "you must always give them time if you want them to make a bargain at any price except their own."

The full significance of the American note is still the subject of much speculation. There is comment upon the issuance of such an obscure docu-

FRENCH CONSIDER UNIFICATION OF RUHR COMMAND

Officers Make Tour of Inspection -Occupation Is Reported as Economic Failure

By SISLEY HUDDLESTON By Special Cable

PARIS, Jan. 25-The idea of unity of command is making headway. Yves le Trocquer, Minister of Public Works, and General Weygand are making a tour of inspection in the Ruhr Valley. No decision has yet been taken, but everything points to General Weygand being nominated to control the proceedings both on the civil and military side. At the present orders pass between General Degoutte at Düsseldorf and Mayence, General Tirad at Coblenz, and M. Costé at Essen. There must be difficult consultations between these cen-ters and Paris, whenever a decision has to be taken. For all the author ities to be in accord is not a simple matter.

President Millerand and Raymond Poincaré, the Premier, have, it is stated, no desire to direct the detailed operations from Paria. So many orders have proyed to be impracticable. Thus the re-direction of the coalladen trains is recognized to be a blunder. In theory it may be possibl to requisition coal in this manner. but in fact the only result is to block

Another example is that of the ar rests of the German coal kings with the son of August Thyssen at their head. At first it was to have been an lecting large quantities of tropical instant arrest and a long incarcerasome hesitation, which expressed itself in the guarded language of the document in question the Ruhr and was strengthening the good relations between the big indushesitated to lay hands on them.

But the whole character of the move changed, and the War Council which has now pronounced sen-tences has produced a flasco, after all the talk of long periods of prison. Fritz Thyssen has to pay 5000 francs as fine, and others similar penalties except in the case of Herr Hofe, who is to pay nearly a quarter of a million francs.

French Opinion Vaccilating

The point is that the French do no seem quite able to make up their minds whether they shall be severe or mild and conciliatory. The perils of their task will be appreciated when it is considered that nothing they can do will not be bad for their cause. For these and other reasons M. le Trocquer and General Weygand desire to see for themselves how the land lies Weygand will take on himself the difficult job of administration. With the renewed threats of strikes, quick decisions may be necessary. The French by no means suppose that their troubles are over.

Not only are the railways stopping and the miners doubtful, but it would not be surprising were there to be violent incidents. The military forces considered that the occupation, in a military sense, is consolidated. Tech-

FORLORN REFUGEE FLEET FINDS HAVEN IN MANILA HARBOR

Fleet Puts Into the Philippines Where Emigrants May Be Allowed to Land

By Special Cable

MANILA, P. I., Jan. 25-A forford fleet of 12 ships, battered with a long voyage down the China coast and bearing the remnant of Admiral Kolt-chak's anti-Bolshevist forces from Eastern Siberia, has anchored off Mariveles, the quarantine station at the entrance to Manila Bay. Five vessels arrived on Saturday, the remaining seven having sailed astray somewhere in the China Sea, to reappear yesterday on the coast of Formosa, whence they headed for the Philimpines.

Driven slowly down the line of the Driven slowly down the line of the trans-Siberian railway by an overwhelming Bolbhevist army, these "white" troops were forced into the sea when Vladivostok, their last stronghold on the Asiatic mainland, fell into the hands of the Sovieta. With ships, but without destination; with a flag but without country, it is a homeless fiotilia which has sought refuge under the Stars and Stripes.

Lay for Weeks at Woosung The ships-with 1200 refugees aboard-lay for several weeks at the port of Woosung, outside Shanghai, hoping to gain admission to China which was finally refused. In addition to the soldiers aboard there are some 400 Russian boys and 200 women and children. When they reached Shang-hai the supply of food and fuel was practically exhausted, and while the foreigners in the city replenished the ship's larders, the Chinese raised sums sufficient to provide the ships with fuel. Three hundred of the younger refugees were finally allowed to land at Shanghai, and have been taken in charge by a charity organization in the international settlement, in the hope that they may be taken to the United States under the care of the American Red Cross.

Other contingents of Admiral Kolt-chak's defeated troops are scattered throughout eastern Asia, a part of the 7500 in the original body which fled from Vladivostok three months ago. Six thousand are interned by the Japanese at Gensan in Korea.

Application to General Wood Commanding the fleet outside Manila is admiral Stark, anti-Soviet leader, who has sent application to Leonard Wood, the Governor-General, asking permission to land. General Wood, who is at present on an inspection tour in Zambales province, has agreed to visit the Russians and confer with Admiral Stark before returnfer with Admiral Stark before returnthe lines. This is a good example of how the academic reasoning of Paris, which takes but little heed of the complex life of the Ruhr, goes astray.

STATUE REJECTION BRINGS DEMAND FOR NEW ART AUTHORITY

Granting of authority to the Mayor of Boston to appoint the members of the city's art commission without DUSSELDORF, Jan. 25 (By The As-L. Burrill, member of the Governor's Council, in support of his own petition for such authority, heard today before the committee on cities of the Massachusetts Legislature.

The bill grows out of the refusal by the city commission to accept a statue of Clarence R. Edwards, Major-General, U. S. A., retired, which had been approved by Mayor Curley. Mr. Burrill pointed out that the sculptor was a man of international standing whose works were to be found in the New York Hall of Fame. He asserted that some change should be made in the choice of personnel of the commission, which is made up, he said, of one artist who "has achieved some fame in painting cows" and four architects.

He said that Beverly has been able to maintain a rate of taxation lower by $10 to $15 than surrounding communities by fol lowing up the taxpayers and getting returns. "Lack of sand" he ascribed the only reason similar activity is opposition to this bill.

The assessors also supported a bill which would exempt automobiles from local taxation which must be levied out that injustices in taxation arise from the fact that many automobile owners own their cars only 364 days a year, or buy them for delivery after the first day of April. Under th posed bill a permit signifying that the tax had been paid would be required before the vehicle could be rgistered.

over the renowned and picturesque villa D'Este at Tivoli, many suggestions have been made to the Undersecretary of State for Fine Arts with regard to its future use. It has been anally decided to restore it to its former spiendor and convert it into a museum of national customs, hitherto wanting in Italy. Some time will naturally pass before the museum can be opened to the public, for the restorations both in the villa and in the gardens are extensive.

Signora Eleonora Duse has been asked by an important literary club of Milan to form a permanent theater in that city. The formation of such an institution has long been desired by theater amateurs as it is considered to be the only way by which theatrical productions can reach perfection. What mostly prevented its formation in Italy before, was the difficulty of obtaining an annual subsidy by the Government similar to that given to some of the best theatrical

Lines of Education to Keep Up

Stratton, the new president of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, spoke on the subject of "The aboratory and Industry."

His welcome to the city and the attitude of the business men of the city regarding the Massachusetts Institute of Technology were dwelt upon strongly by him. He reviewed s recent Government work in Washington as showing his interest in technical education in producing data to show men how to keep up with the demands of modern industrial life, and now in charge of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, his work was, he said, to produce men ho could do the work demanded. The old idea, he said, of technical education was to turn out generally useful mechanical engineers, but now the demands of the times, aided by the experiences during the World War, called for many new lines of education to enable manufacturing to keep up with the demands of the world.

That more and more effort should be given to keep abreast of the times in the education of technical and scientific men was one of the points he stressed. He paid tribute to Boston business men as being a class of the most public-spirited citizens he had

In many cities of the country, he said, as soon as a public improvement contemplated, the business men begin at once to examine the project to see where there will be money in it for them. In Boston, however, his brief experience showed that the great class of business men and the business

In 1875 the name of the paper was changed from The Magenta to The Crimson, with the changing of the color of the university. The Crimson remained a fort-nightly publication until, in 1883, it absorbed The Harvard Herald, then some two years old. From that time on it was # daily known as The Herald-Crimson. development of the situation without any real authority to control it.

The apparent reluctance of the Legislature to act-promptly on this matter can be due to only two reasons: One, a belief that no emergency exists; in which case this administration is not needed by the State; or, two, the fact that the character of this administration is such as to make them timid that the character of this administration is such as to make them timid about giving it legal authority for its action. In order to clarify the situation as regards the latter condition. I feel that it would be helpful to you to give a free hand in building up a new organization in which the Legislature might have more confidence.

It is my impression that much of the criticism against the bill was directed against several sections which were not suggested either by the Attorney-General or by us, and I am mentioning this fact to you in order to make our record entirely clear.

You have been kind enough to request us to continue, but I regret to have to ask you to consider this letter as final, the resignations to be effective upon appointment of our successors, or in any event not later than Jan 21.

ROWING OUTLOOK AT WASHINGTON

Loss of Three Leading Rowing Experts to Yale Has Not Lessened Interest

SEATTLE, Wash., Jan. 25 (Special) Despite the fact that the University of Washington lost three of its best crew men to Yale University, interest water sport at the university has by no means diminished. Coach Edward Leader, former head coach at Washington, is now tutoring the Eli oarsmen, and Murphy, captain of Washington's shell last year, and Lynn Moore, a super-varsity oarsman, are assisting him.

To fill Leader's place, Russell Callow, former Washington oarsman under Conibear, is directing the crew was initiated by Conibear and later used by Leader.

WRESTLING AT IOWA FOR 1923

M. Howard, Former Champion of Denmark, Is Giving His Men Daily Workouts

IOWA CITY, Ia., Jan. 25 (Special)-Frestling Coach M. Howard, for seavyweight champion of Denmark, is getting his work well under way at University of Iowa. He has a squad when these two teams meet the game was productive of excellent hockey and the locals showed considerable improvement over their last two home games.

They discarded the five-man defensive game and most of their attacks were made by two and three players and they kept boring in oh Benedict after rebounds. Ottawa has adopted this style of play and as a result the game was one of the fastest of the season, with the St. Patrick's having the margin in the first 40 minutes and being saved from defeat in the last 10 minutes by the brilliant work of Roach in goal, who turned aside a number of shots after the visiting attackers had penetrated the local defense.

The teams battled for over 38 minutes before Dye scored the first goal on a pass from Cameron, but on the play up to that time the locals were valued for at least two goals, two or three great stores by Repealder when of 30 men working out daily for places sentative in the bantam class. His fine work last year and the promise he have this season gives the coach asshows this season gives the coach as-surance that he can trust the little man to give a good account of himself. Among the featherweights, G. C. Blome '24, and W. H. Albers '33, are the leading candidates, with seeming to have the edge. Trickey '24, seemed to have this place clinched, but for several reasons will probably be out all season. Coach Howard thought him better than Vans.

In the 135-pound class, E. E. Jacobson '24, with his "Big Ten" experience, should show to good advantage. But he is being pressed by K. C. Comstock '25, until it is difficult to know which may land this position. Comstock has been in the game but five months and has many rough spots in his work, but Coach Howard thinks he will develop rapidly. He expects the new man will become a better wrestler than Sweeney, last year's captain, who was never put on his back during his three years of "Big Ten" competition, and who was Con-ference champion in his class in 1921. There seems little doubt that W. H.

Thom '25, a new man, will handle the welterweight job. The middleweight place will undoubtedly go to D. W. James '24, one of the best wrestlers on the team. He was one of the mainstays last year. C. S. Roberts '25, might land the position with a less formidable rival, but can scarcely hope to get a chance with James. In the light heavy class, C. J. Kriz '25 will probably fall heir to the place vacated by the graduation of Hunter. Capt. J. C. Heldt '23 will have no opposition as his own successor. It is his third season on the mat. He should place high in the Conference again this year.
Iowa faces five Conference opponents this season, opening the schedule with Minnesota at Minneapolis Feb. 3. Tryouts for the seven weights are being held. Coach Howard be-lieves that, barring the unexpected, the Hawkeyes should make as good a showing as the aggregation that rep-resented the university in 1922. The resented the university in 1922.

-Held scoreless during the first period, Vancouver came up from be-hind in its Pacific Coast Hockey Association game last night and literally awamped the Victoria team. In the second period Vancouver scored almost as it p getting six goals at an average of a little less than one to every three minutes. In the final chapter Victoria made a gallant effort to achieve a garrison finish. The Victorians managed to score three times in this period, but were unable to hold their opponents, who made two more goals before the bell rang. Honors were just about divided among the winners, but Mackay gave possibly the most impressive performance. He was trying every minute that he was on the ice, scoring one goal and getting two assists. Boucher also exhibited a remarkably effective game, making the same showing in the score as Mackay. The Western Agriculturist

To the Editor of The Christian Science
Monitor:

In an editorial entitled "Farmers and Their Needs" in the Jan. 10 issue of the Monitor there are statements made which I feel might be misleading to persons not thoroughly acquainted with western agricultural conditions. It is eems that the writer means to imply that, no matter how much apparent benefit any particular branch of agriculture seems to gain from a protective tariff, this is always offset by the corresponding raise in price of necessities which the farmer requires due to the general system of tariff always adopted.

While it is possible that staples such as corn, wheat, etc., are as a rule less benefited by a protective tariff than some other products, due, as the writer states, to the prices being controlled.

I think all readers of thim, neither does which the paramount importance which the paramount importance which the tariff is to him, neither does de tariff is to him, neither does which the tariff is to him, neither does de taried by evading facts. It is a fact that during the poss

Cushing sought for beauty with a rare persistence and the beauty that he loved so and surrounded himself with is reflected in all of his canvases. The interest in his work is divided between the portraits of lovely women and the purely decorative paintings with which he became more and more concerned toward the end of his career. His color harmonies are always of the delicacy and refinement that grows out of association with the best art of all times. Two Women of Talent

Nanna Matthews Bryant is a young sculptor from Boston who is appearing at these galleries for her second New York exhibition. She has filled the large room devoted to her marbles with a variety of animated figures and groups which display a versatility, energy, and imagination quite unique. Being a lover of color and needing occasionally a more stimulating medium than stone or marble she turns to making stained-glass windows, one of which fills the end of the gallery with radiant color and provides a vivid contrast to the white figures showing pale in the half-light against the rich stuff hung truly of this century. The Rodin formula of smoothly rounded forms emerging from rough-hewn blocks of marble occurs frequently in her work. There is also a strong similarity to the French master in the manner of pose, but in line and composition she relies more on strong light and shade for gaining her point. Her execution and knowledge of form is everywhere evidenced. A small bronze figure for a fountain is perhaps her happiest contribution though somewhat obcontribution, though somewhat ob-scured by her many large and pretentious figures. The puzzling question as to the limits of the animate in sculpture is time honored and has been successfully answered by but a few. Also the difference between the sense of movement and the feeling of restlessness is a fine point for the sculptor's consideration. That these thoughts arise in connection with Mrs. Bryant's work is an indica-

"The Christian" is a photoplay which the motion picture world has been waiting for-none too patiently. It comes in a season which ran to huge spectacles, to million dollar productions, to cheap melodrama, and weak comedies. The bright spots, the worth-while plays, have been few and far between. But now comes a picture with a large human appeal, sympathetically set forth. It is amazing that with a plot which presented so many chances for what is known as "box-office appeal" the producers have been able to treat them all so simply and sincerely. There is no distortion of the tele no extenut to distortion of the tale, no attempt to make melodramatic situations more the methods do not fit such a work as this symphony. Its loftiness and serenity stand in danger of nullification when it is conceived dramatically. Even the "Rienzi" number relapsed into the sheerest melodrama by the insistence on every ounce of energy at the command of the brass section. We have a first cornetist who, given an inch of liberty, will take a yard, and this sad defect rather unbalances things sometimes.

A rendering of the Beethoven Scherzando from the eighth symphony was perhaps the most satisfactory thing on the program; the humor and graceful charm were quite delightfully presented. The audience was delighted with the farewell piece, the Strauss with the larewell piece, the Strauss waitz, "Roses From the South."

At the Friday night concert Mr. Damrosch essayed the Tschaikowsky "Fate" symphony; the "Leonore" overture No. 3, and a novelty for Minneapolis, the "Adagio" for strings by Lekeu. Of the latter one can speak with mixed feelings, for in the power of sustained and somber expression there is something of the same grandeur and pathos found in the "Marche funebre" from the Beethoven eighth symphony, with this very striking difference, Beethoven knew when to lighten its austerity; Lekeu carried it to the bitter end. The composition fails of effect simply cause there is too little variety and too much gloomy repetition. Although Mr. Damrosch takes his tempi much more rapidly than we are accustomed to in the Tschaikowsky symphony, there is justification in the results he secures. He rather light-ens the thought of a malignant and unyielding fate by stressing the importance of the opposition. His reading therefore becomes less sinister and more agreeable, which may not be true to the content, but relieves

FISHER BODY STOCK FINDING

New Common Will Be Issued at Price Much Lower Than Recent Market Figures

NEW YORK, Jan. 25—The $75 price for the 100,000 shares additional Fisher Body Corporation common stock is more than 137 points less than the recent high of 212½ reached under the special stimulus of an outside specu-lative interest. It is nearly 100 points less than current levels and indicates that the Fisher management considers the stock not worth the $200 a share at which W. C. Durant sold "units" of one-fifth of a share of Fisher common on the partial payment plan to small

Most if not all of Mr. Durant's estimated 20,000 shares of Fisher common has been pledged as security for these "units" which were distributed in three offerings: The first in November, 1922 at $32 a unit, the equivalent of $160 a share; the second at $35, equivalent to $175 and the third at $40, equivalent to $200 a share.

At Tuesday's low price of $162 in the New York stock market, the purchasers of the first offering of "units" had a paper profit equivalent to $2 a share representing five units, while buyers of the second instalment had a equivalent to $13 a share, and purchasers of "units" on basis of $200 share had paper losses of $38 a

PROPER LEVEL Coal Shortage Brings Greatly Increased Demand

> NEW YORK, Jan. 25-The increasing demand for insulation materials due to the coal shortage, the growing body of legislation requiring fireproof building materials, and the requirements of the automobile industry for asbestos brake-lining are three factors which will make 1923 a peak year in the asbestos industry and possibly a year of actual shortage of asbestos products, according to the annual "outlook for the asbestos industry" just issued by T. F. Manville, president of Johns-Manville Inc.
> "The shortage in coal," says Mr. Manville, "together with the absence building materials, and the require-Manville, "together with the absence of any indications pointing toward material reduction in prices, has greatly stimulated practical fuel conservation through the use of efficient methods of insulation. Not only is more insulation being used, but the increasing price of coal makes much thicker insulation a decidedly eco-nomical proposition. The virtual elimination of radiation losses and air leaks, together with marked reductions in heat losses in other directions, has made it possible for certain manufacturers to reduce their coal consumption by 16 per cent. Asbestos insulation, as a substitute for coal, will thus find an ever-increasing marhome, where less efficient equipment renders it possible for asbestos insulation to reduce coal consumption by fully 25 per cent.

"A steady decline in the price of asbestos during the year just closed has placed the market again upon a fairly normal basis, and for many reasons it is clear that 1923 is to be demand.

FRUIT COMPANY STOCK OFFERED

Lehman Brothers, Goldman, Sachs Co., and E. F. Edwin F. Atkins

DWIN FARNSWORTH ATKINS, senior member of E. Atkins & Co. of Boston, is a native of Boston, son of Elisha Atkins, who founded the firm of E. Atkins & Co. He attended Mr. Brooks' Classical School for Boys. In 1868 he got his first job, when he acted as a receiving clerk for his father's firm, checking up sugar cargoes from Cuba.

He worked in all the departments of his father's company, thoroughly learning the business and working as hard as any other employee. Later his father sent him to Cienfuegos, Cuba, where he served an apprenticeship anish merchant, a close business associate of his father.

In 1874 Mr. Atkins entered the firm of E. Atkins & Co. in Boston. Due to rebellions in Cuba, which imperiled the property of the company and necessitated yearly visits there, Mr. Atkins gradually assumed entire management of the Cuban interests of his firm. The courage, ability, and force of character, noted in his forefathers, enabled him to guide the firm to its present prosperous position in the industry.

Mr. Atkins owns about one-tenth of the Cuban output of sugar. He aided materially in getting through the United States Congress the reciprocity treaty with Cuba in regard to reciprocal taxes on imports of sugars. From 1910 to 1915, Mr. Atkins served as member of the executive committee, vice-president, and chairman of the board of directors of the American Sugar Refining Company, and for five years thereafter he continued to serve as director. Aside from his sugar interests, Mr. Atkins has played an active part in the development of several other companies. He succeeded to his father's place as one of the directors of the Union Pacific Railroad, serving as vice-president and member of the executive committee for 12 years, and acting as ranking officer in the east. For many years he has been connected with Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, of which he was elected a member of the reorganization committee after collapse in 1907, later serving as member of its board and for a time as

Mr. Atkins is intensely interested in botany, having a beautiful botanical garden in his Cuban estate. In 1893 he gave to Harrard University a fund, called the Atkins Fund for Tropical Research, to promote the interests of that science, and he was elected an honorary member of the university at that time.

In his business activities he has been president of the Bay State Refinery, 1878-88; is now president of the Ætna Mills; director of the Westing-house Electric & Manufacturing Company, the Boston Wharf Company, the West End Street Railway, the Guarantee Company of North America, the Second National Bank, Shirreffs Worsted Company, the Caledonia Sugar Company (Cuba), the Soledad Sugar Company (Cuba), the Punta Alegre Sugar Company (Cuba), and its subsidiaries, Caracas Sugar Company, Brown Company, E. BIG REFINANCING TO GET RID OF

Seven and Eight Per Cent Bonds Have Been Changed Into
Less Expensive Issues

A considerable part of the extremely heavy financing operations which have featured the bond market in the opening weeks of the year has arisen from the natural desire of leading corporations to rid themselves so far as possible of the burden of interest charges to this road, as it serves a non-union stole for the burden of interest charges to this road, as it serves a non-union affeld. contracted during the period of high rates in 1920 and 1921. For the most part the 7 per cent and 8 per cent bonds issued at that time carried redemption features permitting the borrower to redeem his obligation upon payment of a small premium.

Already a large number of such high-rate bond issues have been redeemed, in some cases out of cash as business improved but generally out of the proceeds of refunding bond issues bearing lower interest rates.

Midvale 5s May Be Redeemed in Near Future-Large Obligations Soon Due

Bethlehem Steel Corporation's absorption of Lackawanna Steel Company and Midvale Steel Company was eccomplished through the exchange of stocks. Thus the greatest consolidation of steel companies since the formation of the United States Steel Cor-ranging in size from $310,000 to $22,-277,000, and secured by various por-tions of its property. Acquisition of Lackawanna added a number of issues and the purchase of Midvale has added still another.

Midvale Householders Assent The $41,100,000 Midvale Steel &

Ordnance convertible 5s, 1936 will be, for the present at least, the largest single obligation of the combined company. The issue was originally secured by all the capital stock of the Cambria Steel Company but had no other direct lien.

Certain clauses in the indenture securing the issue, however, made the outright acquisition of the Midvale property and the practical elimination of its capital stock of somewhat doubtful validity. Such clauses provided that Midvale would not "make any reduction of its capital stock of somewhat doubtful validity of the capital stock of somewhat doubtful validity of the capital stock are secured." reduction of its capital stock, nor mortgage or pledge any property now owned or hereafter acquired It thus became advisable to secure the consent of the Midvale bondholders to the merger.

As consideration for their assent the bondholders are offered in place of a lien on the Cambria stock a direct first lien on the Cambria property, a direct first lien on the Midvale prop-erty and the guaranty of Bethlehem. For the privilege of converting into Midvale stock at $100 a share they

NEW YORK CURB NEW YORK CURB

NEW YORK, Jan. 25—The Curb Market today showed practically a full recovery from the disturbed conditions caused by the break in Fisher Body on the New York Stock Exchange Tuesday which was followed by the severe decline in Durant Motors on that day and yesterday. Other motor stocks were quiet, Stutz Motor being traded in on its small scale while a strong tone was shown in Hayes Wheel which went up 1 point, followed by a reaction around midday. Glen Alden made a fractional advance ranging from 64½ to 65½. Goodyear Tire issues were irregular, the common stock moving up to 12, a new high for recent trading, while slight recessions occurred in the preferred issues in the early dealings.
Standard Oil issues were generally quiet and without special range in prices. Standard Oil of Indiana yielded slightly in the early trading but the decline brought in buying orders on a fairly large scale and it made a quick recovery. South Penn Oil moved up from 174 to 176 on a few transactions. Independent oil stocks were generally steady and, although some of those issues oil off in the morning, rallies were in order later. Gulf Oil made an advance of over 1 point in the early trading, but was then in supply. Penn Beaver held steady at around its recent trading level. There was a further decline in Maracaibo Oil.

Mining stocks continued active, but most of those issues were in supply reflecting realizing and liquidation.

STEEL MILLS ARE TRYING TO CATCH UP WITH ORDERS

The Iron Age says: Steel producers, particularly in the Pittsburgh district, find it difficult to get operations up to the scale called for by orders. Their less receptive attitude toward new business comes from the feeling that as spring approaches the labor situation will be worse. Calling off of the long, ineffective strike at non-union Connells-ville mines makes little change in that situation. Assured continuance of coal production means that, with the passing of winter, coke will decline along with coal. That fact and its

WORLD'S SURPLUS OF RAW COTTON DISAPPEARING

Carryover Dwindles Nearly 5.000,000 Bales in Year-Rise in Price 81 Per Cent

The world's surplus of cotton, which in the season of 1921-1922 hung like a shadow over the cotton market, is Net op rv.$13,772,647 $13,865.5 Net op inc 2,666,398 1,735.4 rapidly disappearing. On Aug. 1, 1921 the world held a carryover of 14,752, 000 bales, the growth of all countries ranging from American upland an the fine long staple of Egypt to the coarse cottons of India, and still shorter and coarser of China. One yea later the carryover was 9,946,000 there is no great change in consump tion this year the surplus in the coming August will be about 6,000,000

This is the result of several years of under-production, while consump regaining pre-war volume Consumption last year was more than 20,000,000 bales, but in no season since 1914 has the world produced as much cotton as is now being consumed Crops of the last two years have been far below the amount used, and re-serves have been so drawn upon that the surplus of 1921 will, in 1923, have diminished about 55 per cent.

World Output Figures

Production figures from countries outside the United States are neither prompt nor reliable. Estimates from a few of the principal producers ar at hand, which, with the Unite States, yield about 90 per cent of the world crop. Comparisons follow, i mostly to the crop failure in the United States, shrank to 14,741,000 bales; but consumption went to 20,-000,000. The world crop this year is about 17,000,000 bales, and if conaumption equals last season, another large deficit is to be registered.

Use Not at Pre-War Level

World consumption, while not up to the pre-war record, is now around 20,000,000 bales of all kinds. In 1914, world production was in excess of this amount, but never since then have 20,000,000 bales been produced in any one season. Aside from the United States, total of the producing world has run approximately the same as in and before 1914, averaging around 8, 000,000 bales.

Whether the cotton crop of 1923 will be even equal to consumption, de-pends upon whether the United States produces a minimum of 12,000,000, or at least 2,000,000 more than in 1922.

Price of Staple High

A year ago raw cotton sold at 16 cents a pound in the United States. This week the staple touched 29 cents a pound, an increase of more than 81 per cent. Throughout this period the advance has been most orderly. Occasional small reactions have invariably been followed by recoveries to new high prices.

Undue speculation has been absent. Cotton has advanced solely on its merits until now it is selling for twice the average price for 30 years prior to the World War.

That the cotton situation is serious few will deny. It is due to the steadily diminishing supply of raw ma-

REORGANIZING OF BROOKLYN RAPID TRANSIT GOES ON

Negotiations Which Contemplate Formation of New Company Are Progressing

NEW YORK, Jan. 25—Considerable progress toward bringing into final shape the tentative plan for reorganizing the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company has been reported since the plan was submitted last week by teachbolden; and articipation. According to estimates based on the present rate of earnings, revenue in the first year of operation of the organized system will be sufficient to meet all fixed charges and to pay preferred dividends and show more than $2 a share on common. stockholders' and noteholders' protective committees to committees representing other Brooklyn Rapid Transit issues. It is also reported that representatives of the Brooklyn City Railroad Company have participated in negotiations for the purpose of considering terms offered for merging with the Brooklyn Rapid Transit system all lines of the Brooklyn City

Company.

Although the plan under consideration is tentative, and may be materially modified as negotiations proeed, certain features are certain to appear in the final draft. These will include an issue of preferred and one of 6 per cent refunding mortgage bonds to take up Brooklyn Rapid Transit 7 per cent notes of 1921, outstanding bonds of New York Municipal Railway Corporation, Brooklyn Rapid Transit first gold 5s of 1945, and Brooklyn Rapid Transit refund-

Stockholders will be asked to subscribe at par for new securities to the extent of about $35 a share; a relative amount of new securities to be subscribed for is reported to have been set provisionally at approxi-mately one-third preferred and twothirds new 6 per cent bonds. A syndicate is to be formed to assist in disposing of the new issues.

Underlying Bonds

Reorganization managers contemplate the formation of a new company having 751,000 shares of common to replace, share for share, Brooklyn Rapid Transit common. It is proposed to leave undisturbed Brooklyn Union Elevated first 5s of 1950 and Kings County Elevated first 4s of 1949.
Bonds of Brooklyn, Queens County

Suburban and Nassau Electric gold 4s. on which interest payments have been discontinued, will also remain; holders of these will be asked to accept preferred in payment of accumulated interest. The amount of refunding mortgages

6s proposed to be issued is $93,000,000. Brooklyn Rapid Transit 7 per cent noteholders will be offered these in exchange for their notes, and will be asked to accept on account of accumulated interest, which by July 1, next, will amount to 35 per cent, 7 per cent in cash, 10 per cent in refunding

6s and 18 per cent in refunding 6s and 18 per cent in preferred stock.

Holders of $6,988,000 Brooklyn Rapid Transit first gold 5s outstanding are asked, in the tentative planto accept for their holdings 83 1-3 per cent principal of refunding 6s, and for interest, in default since April 1919 2214 per cent in preferred. 1, 1919, 22½ per cent in preferred. Holders of Brooklyn Rapid Transit first refunding gold 4s are offered in exchange for their holdings 66 2-3 per cent of principal in refunding 6s, and 18 per cent on account of accumulated interest. Default on these bonds occurred July 1, 1919. Opposition to Plan

The terms of the tentative plan appear generally acceptable to bondholders, except holders of the Brook-Transit 4s. who. stood, are prepared to hold out for better terms. This determination is strengthened by the attitude of several banks which have made loans aggregating about $3,000,000 and accepted as collateral approximately $7,000,000 refunding 4s. The immediate effect on Brooklyn Rapid Transit stock of an assessment will depend on the market value of the new securities "when issued." Assuming the new stock to be equal in value to the old-since the number of shares

I wish to express my sincere appreciation of the value of the Christian. Science monitor, both as a reliable, high-principled newspaper, and as an advertising medium.

The first affearance in the Monitor of our School advertisement brought enquiries, and a considerable increase in the number of our pupils appears likely to result.

Christian Science Monitor

For very many years Mount Ida School has made use of the columns of the Monitor to advertise the school. We have had a great many letters of inquiry. It is rather interesting to know that most of these inquiries that have come to us from the Monitor have been from parents, those earnestly interested in choosing a school for their daughters. It is also interesting to know that a large percentage of these inquiries have resulted in the daughters coming to us.

We shall continue to use the columns of the Monitor to make known Mount Ida School.

name, started in his sleep, for he was a musician; and, no matter where he might be or what he was doing, music always roused him. Sweetly and distinctly the melody was borne to his ears, and he sat up in bed to listen.

It seemed to come from down-stairs; he rubbed his eyes and pulled at his silky-brown whiskers, to make sure he was awake. Yes, there was no doubt about that. He certainly was not dreaming, and it was just as cer-tain that the music came from his own house. Yet how could that be? No one in the family played, except his daughter Nannerl and himself; besides those two, there were only his wife and baby Wolfgang in the house. Yet, with every note vibrant as a bird song, a concertino sounded from his own clavier up the stairway.

Father Mozart Investigates

Stepping into his woolen slippers, he started down to see. The house was dark. Whoever made the music was doing it without even the light of a taper, and he wondered if Anton Ludurs had stolen in to the instrument he loved. Anton had been a member of the court orchestra of Salzburg for more than 30 years; but now another had his place. Anton having no clavier, Herr Mozart let him play at his house, where the old man came and went as he chose.

But, upon second thought, Leopold Mozart knew the performer could be the musician. He himself had locked the doors and bolted the windows, before going to bed, and Anton had no key. There was something mysterious about it, so cautiously he crept down the stairs.

As he neared the living room, the notes grew clearer, louder. Then, through the open door, he beheld a gleam of light above the clavier, a luminous, narrow belt that streamed in through the window from the winter moon. Then Leopold Mozart be-held what he could scarce believe The yellow curls of a child showed plainly in that belt of moonshine; and, to his amazement, he saw that the music-maker was his baby son,

Glaucus

THE big gray house was silent as a deserted place, for it was mid-inght and the city slept. Now and then the branches of an elm tree lashed the window, swung back and forth by the wind, and sometimes the call of a winter owl echoed along the sall was quiet, so still it might have been a houseless region, far out in the wilds.

Then suddenly, through the silence and darkness, sounded the notes of a clavier, the piano of a hundred and fifty years ago, softly fingered, rhythmic strains ringing out in a concerting.

Father Mozart, John Leopold by Father Mozart Moza in the chicken-run. But then it be-fell that Glaucus lost all his feathers! Everybody knows that chickens change their feathers when they grow a bit bigger, but generally the new feathers are already peeping out as the old ones drop off. Wigh Glaucent, for some reason, this was different. The new feathers refused to come and sisters began to laugh at him and even Mather Plymouth Rock was ashamed of this curious little creature. So Glaucus felt unhappy, and stood about in corners instead of scratching. That is where Nancy found him. She saw at once that he was a fine chicken, but cold without his feathers. So she ran and fetched a black silk stocking, cut two holes for his legs and dressed him in a little coat! Glaucus felt happy at once and was soon scratching again in the flower bed. He hoped his sis-ters and brothers would admire him when they came back in the evening. But, sad to relate, they thought he looked funnier than ever in his little black coat, and they pecked at him. Glaucus fied to his new friend and said, as plain as plain could be: "You look after me! Cheep, cheep!" A nice basket was found, stuffed with soft rags and placed in the kitchen; and there little Glaucus was to sleep every night. He liked that. Early in the morning, when the black boy came to light the kitchen stove, Glaucus would chirp: "Peep! Peep!" and that was a signal to be lifted out of his basket and put outside in the sun. He soon learned where Nancy slept, and arrived every morning at her bedroom door to march in the minute she opened it. Some grain generally awaited him. After a while Glaucus noticed that the gray tom-cat had his porridge and milk out of a plate in the kitchen. So Glaucus decided he would have his there, too. The cat was rather surprised at first, when the little black-coated stranger came to peck out of the same plate; but, after a few mornings, he always waited until they could have it to-

Glaucus got to know Nancy's habits very well, and, when she read for an hour or two every morning on the porch, he chose that as his time for repose, and snuggled close to her foot until study-time was over. It was not long before his feathers had grown and what a fine crop it was! Any of the other chickens were proud now if he associated with them, but he preferred Nancy's company and never always roosted on the arm or back of her chair; and once, when she was taking a nap on the porch sofa, he softly climbed up and settled down gently on her chest, which surprised her a great deal when she woke up. Even when quite a big bird he per-sisted in sleeping in the rag-basket, and never failed to eat breakfast with

SPAIN NEGOTIATING TRADE AGREEMENTS

and Italy

MADRID, Spain, Jan. 5 (Special Correspondence)-There is intensified activity in Spanish governmental departments associated with foreign trade and commerce, the policy of the new Government being to foster more intimate relations with foreign states than in the past. This has been the declared policy of successive governments, but little has been done toward carrying it into effect. The present ministry wishes to convey that, in spite of the new tariff and its significance, it wants better arrangements and more sympathies overseas. notable result is that states which showed a disposition to hold aloof are now busy considering new possibili-ties of trade relations with Spain.

There is one striking example of this in the case of France. The long struggle over the recently concluded commercial treaty had made it appear that, despite the final settlement, there was little to be hoped for in the future beyond such trade as was absolutely essential to the two nations. Some sudden concessions to France have changed all this, and French commercial and industrial agents are visiting Even more important and significant, is the circumstance that the United States is now giving special attention to this matter, and the American commercial attaché at Madrid has been for some days in Barcelona consulting with the leading Catalonian cotton and woolen manufacturers upon the possible and desirable bases of negotiations which will have for their ultimate object the carrying through of a new commercial treaty between the two nations.

Production of Sound Character First, Says New Chicago Head

Chicago, Ill.

"DUCATION in a democratic world." That brief phrase tersely denotes the deepest educational convictions of the newly elected president of the University of Chicago, Dr. Ernest DeWitt Burton.

"In the clitizens of a democracy for the discovery of a type of education which shall be at the same time cultural and occupational, Dr. Burton added. "It has long been a favorite theory of mine." he observed. "that agriculture is the control of the public schools and how can they do their part effectively?"

Need exists also for very many of the clitizens of a democracy for the discovery of a type of education which shall be at the same time cultural and occupational, Dr. Burton added. Know Not How to Educate.

For evidence that the world is rapidly becoming democratic, Dr. Burton pointed to the formation and development of the League of Nations and the Washington Conference as conspicuous. Obviously then a demo-cratic world must be educated. "Democracy demands education and without it is a dangerous experiment," at least with which I am acquainted, has the science or the art of education been fully mastered," continued the professor. "To put it more bluntly, we do not yet know how to educate. Nor have we yet arrived at ditions in other nations than our own, any satisfactory solution of the ques- and that we take a sympathetic intion of what education should be terest to say the least in the educagiven to all the people and what should be reserved for special classes of the youth or those who are preparing for certain occupations."

The education of a democracy cannot safely be limited to the period of youth, but must include systematic

There is a real need of much more systematic investigation than we have yet made or are now making in the whole field of education, Dr. Burton pointed out. No more important questions and organized effort to the education for adults. A measure of education for adults far beyond anything that we have attained or are providing for is pointed out. No more important ques-tions face America as a democratic of a very high type of culture."

Passing on, he declared that education in a democracy cannot be carried on to the best advantage either wholly by the State or wholly by voluntary agencies. "The present outlook," he said, "is that the combined efforts of all the schools we possess will not avail to meet the legitimate demand for education in this great democracy, and that the privately supported school, whether large or small, will always have its own contribution to make to the education of the country I fear the tyranny even of a demo-cratic government. Education, the source of our ideals, and the creator of our leaders, must not be too severely standardized.

Must Have World-Wide Outlook

"Education in a democratic world must be international and world-wide in its outlook and in its interest," he continued. "Henceforth we live in a world of democracies whose center of gravity is slowly but inevitably moving westward. "The university is the prophet of democracy," Dr. Burton concluded. and enjoyable. In addition is a multitude of concrete devices for enabling the pupils to learn individually without continuous attention from the teacher.

Here, for instance, sits one of the "bables" learning numbers. He has a box of discs colored in various tints, and a series of cards with sockets in which the discs may be placed. Each card bears a raised colored figure 1, or 2, or 3, up to 9. The colored discs must be matched with the colored figure, and to avoid mistaken matching there are seven blue discs to correspond with the blue figure 7, three brown to correspond with the blue figure 7, three brown to correspond with brown figure 3 and so on. Thus the apparatus is self-corrective, and the little mathematician will spend a large part of the morning "playing" with this attractive toy, absorbing the significance of number, correcting his own errors, and needing only occasional attention from the teacher:

But after school, on the athletic field, or at social fêtes, the children seemed hopeless. The teacher could not nag them when they showed their friendliness in after-school talks; but she constantly felt the need of encouraging them to correct themselves.

Having occasion to write a few articles for a newspaper, this English teacher conceived the idea of training her pupils through the medium of amateur journalism. Awaiting the Echo of a First Book PUBLISHING one's first book of poems, someone has said, is like dropping a rose leaf into the Grand Cañon and then waiting for the echo. The simile is as apt as it is witty and beautiful. Thousands of these petals of poesy drift and circle downward every year into the chasm of all forgotten books, and no faintest whisper of an echo goes back to the eager listeners above. Waiting and listening long, they hear only the rushing sound of the steady, strong, indifferent current of human living.

One more book of verses by an unknown author—what is that? Is there anything more useless, valueless, undesired? Already the dust is thick upon thousands of such where they lie in the darker corners of bookshops. For these three hundred years the world's stock of them has been more than sufficient to meet all requirements. No one ever goes into a bookshop and says: "Let me have the last dozen books of verse by poets who have never published anything before." But still these books come snowing down upon us in ever increasing numbers, refusing utterly to conform to the elementary economic law of supply and demand.

The publication of a second book of poems means that a man has taken his stand, for better or worse, and that there is nothing more for his friends to do about the matter. A first book, however, may signify almost anything. It may mean that the author is getting slowly ready to be a lawyer, and has idle time on his hands while waiting for clients. Three of the foremost poets writing today in America began their work under those circumstances. Again it may mean that he is preparing to become a novelist. Dozens of our makers of fiction have won some part of their skill through an early mastery of rhyme and meter. In one case in a hundred a first book of poetry means that its author is determined to be a poet, and that he has the ability as well as the determination. These are the first books to watch for. The discovery of one of them atones for much fruitless reading of the other sorts.

There has just come to my desk a slender volume of poems written by a man of whom I have never heard before. Creditable verses they seem to be at a first hasty glance, carefully polished, delicately cadenced, deftly turned. This unknown poet who makes herewith his first bow to the reading world is better equipped in some important ways than Shelley and Keats and Browning were at the time of their first publications. In the mere craftsmanship of verse he has a greater skill than Wordsworth ever attained, and anyone who thinks that this mere craftsmanship is easily won should make the experiment. Whether this poet has "anything to say," whether there is the faintest glint of originality in his work I am unable as yet to report, but I know already that he must have worked many a happy and arduous day to make these thirty lyrics so graceful as they are, so musical, so effortless in effect.

Many small indications show that the author of this book is a young man. I think he is a very young man. It is easy to guess how he is feeling just now with his book only two or three weeks off the press. He has done his utmost to bring something new and wonderful into the world, something wholly beautiful. And what he most desires is the heartening support of a little, even a very little public approval. He wants you and me to buy and read his book, then to get together and discuss its excellences, and finally to spread its name and fame among our friends who are capable of appreciating it. A large audience he does not expect. I can imagine that he is quoting Milton with sincere fervor: "Fit audience, though few." Now and then in his bolder moments he may venture to whisper the words of Keats: "Great verse unto a little clan." Why am I so sure of all this? I have said that he is very young, and that he has just published his first volume of poems. The rest follows.

Do we'think of all this sufficiently when we cast a rapid glance along those shelves of the bookstore where the verses of the young unknown are kept? Perhaps not. I can see this young poet of mine waiting, listening, month after month, for the echo of his rose leaf, for a sign that a reader here, a reader there, has bought and read his book. A mere glance at his pages tells me that he will not discover so many of such signs, at first, as to endanger his modesty. I know this not because his poetry is bad. There is no self-conscious posturing in his book, no eager self-advertising, nothing to astonish and bewilder the most conventional reader. Honest workmanship, sound thinking, simple old-fashioned beauty—these are all he has to offer, apparently, and these, we know, are not enough to catch the public ear today, accustomed as it is to voices more shrill and commanding, if not more musical. So he will have to wait a long time, I think, for recognition.

And while he waits, what will happen? Doubtless he feels just now that his sheaf of verses is will pick it up listlessly once a year, perhaps, and find it just tolerable. By the time he is fifty and a successful lawyer or banker he will remember it as a youthful folly. Or it may be—there is one chance in a hundred—that he is already hard at work on his second book, and that he thinks far more scornfully of this one than you and I do. In that case, it would be well to keep a sharp lookout for that next book.

Almost every poet has written and published a first book of poetry. Shakespeare, Milton, Spenser, Dante, Chaucer—the list is endless. Seldom, indeed, does a poet get finto his first book the most powerful or original work he will ever do; but often he does get into it the freshest, the most graceful, the most musical. Quite apart from questions of intrinsic merit, however, and keeping a single eye upon the matter of financial investment alone, the purchase of new first books of verse may be defended. It is difficult even for an expert to say during the first months or years how well a new poet is going to do. If he does very well, his first books become valuable possessions. Several poets now living are unable to buy for themselves the first editions of their own first books. Even this little volume which has just come to me may some day be worth its weight in gold.

In a time when everybody is collecting something or other—stamps, coins, bottles, canes, old chess men, autographs, first-editions—why is it that no one, so far as I have heard, collects first-books of poems? What more harmless, delightful, and beneficent hobby could be imagined? Your purchase of an ancient Greek coin or of a rare postage stamp helps only the agent from whom you buy it. In purchasing a young man's first book of poems, you do at least as eccentric and inexplicable a thing and you do some good besides. I know a man who has given years to the collection of very bad poetry—the very worst, he boasts, in the world. That is an interesting notion, but this of mine seems to be better still—the collection of poetry which may be either very good or very bad, but which at any rate is very young. Think-of the joy that even one eccentric millionaire could cause by simply leaving a standing order with all the publishers for one hundred copies of every first book of poems they might put out! But what is the use? No man ever adopts a hobby so sensible as this one. All I can do is to preserve very carefully the little book that came to me today, among the hundreds of its sort that already stand on my shelves.

Connection of Poetry and Humour

It was no accident that gave Chaucer, Shakespeare and Keats a very sly sense of humour, because humour is surely only another product of the same process that makes poetry and poets—the reconciliation of incongruities. When, for instance, Chaucer says that one of his Canterbury characters could trip and dance "after the schole of Oxenforde" he is saying two things:

I. That Absalom thought he could dance well.

II. That Absalom thought he could dance well. II. That the professors of the University of Oxford are hardly the people from whom one would expect the most likely instruction in that art, and to point the joke he adds to "trip and dance" the absurd "and with his legges casten to and fro." A sympathetic grin, as poets and other conjurors know, is the best possible bridge for a successful illusion. Coleridge was the first writer, so far as I know, to see the connection between poetry and humour, but his argument which uses the Irish Bull "I was a fine child but they changed me" to prove the analogy, trails off disappointingly.—Robert Graves, in "On English Poetry."

Who heeds not how the lower gusts are working, Knowing that one sure wind blows on above.

R. FRANKLIN DE HAVEN here depicts a mood in landscape. It is the mood of what in America is called Indian Summer; that season in which the most unpoetic of mortals pauses to revel in the colorful glory intervening between harvest time and the period of preparation for winter.

One feels the mellow haze that dreams in the

One feels the mellow haze that dreams in the tender sky and even pervades the foreground of the picture because the leaves have almost all fallen from the trees. The erect maple on the left bank of the placid river is quite bare of its glowing mantle, but the birch, in the direct light of the sun, is still crowned with a dower of gold. The rich atmospheric effect gives unity to the canvas and produces a tone like that of tapestry. As is proper to a reverie, light and shade are not massed against each other, color contrasts do not appear to be sudden and the light is diffused.

There is a rhythmical effect in the composition. The vertical lines of the trees are formally balanced against the curves of the river-banks which lead the eye to the background, where under a rustic stone bridge the stream disappears.

Mr. De Haven, whose studio is in New York City, has had a long and successful career as a land-scape painter. Though he has done large imaginative canvases, such as "Castle Creek Canyon in South Dakota," now in the possession of the National Gallery in Washington, D. C., of late he has devoted himself with special success to autumn scenes. His "Willimantic River" has heen admired for the rich bronze colors of its foliage. He may be praised for much that is good in sentiment, color,

Two Views of an Indian Lake

It was a gray day. The lake mournful, lonely, its shores with dark groves of trees mysteriously remote. Now and then a wind whipped the somber water into faint lines of light, and then it was covered by the swirling veil of a mist. There was no human being to be seen, no sound of birds; one looked at it as one looks at some of nature's deeply melancholy pictures that touch no human chord—as one looks at grim mountain ranges, or the precipices of a gorge.

Inexpressibly grand, the lake lay in the deepening shadows that were fast blotting out forest and hill.

The second time a merry party of us had walked through the woods, calling to each other to wake the echoes. The woods seemed to be everywhere, here in ranks of delicately slender trees with the pale tracery of branch and leaf that one sees only in the eucalyptus, there in mighty forest giants flinging themselves forth on every side. The air was sharp and keen and full of the pungent odor of the woods; the skies high above us, cloudless and blue; the sunlight poured down on earth in clear golden radiance. We plunged over broken ground, as hilly here as everywhere in that hilly country, past thickets of wild fruit tree and rhododendron set with belated crimson blossom, and suddenly we left the woods and came out on a bare hill-side. The bracken was withered in clumps. And there below us lay the lake gleaming like a silver floor set in dark green All about its edges glowed gorse and broom golden against the black beauty of the melanoxylon trees, no longer gloomy, but standing like the stately groves of Greek Romance. And still beyond, the shadowy eucalyptus forests crowning hills and peaks to a far-off sunlit distance. Spread-ing green swamps and clumps of reddish brown rushes made a bright patch of color, and along the scarce trodden paths at the lake's margin we saw evidence of the furred and feathered folk that love the water. A wild boar had been there, digging in a search for sweet roots; deer had left their deliimprint; strange long-legged birds had been that way; a panther had slaked its thirst in the still Joyous in the sunlight, the lake lost much of its mystery, none of its charm. lies in the Nilgiris of Southern India, and Nilgiri means Bl.e Mountains.

Forgiving and Forgetting

A CHILD, sitting unnoticed in a corner of the window seat with a story book, overheard one grown-up say to another, "I may forgive; but I can never forget." Recalled abruptly from the joyous realm of romance by this strange saying, the child wondered what dark happening could have prompted the words, and how the lady could forgive if she went on remembering the pain of the injury. The mystery was put away in thought, as so many of childhood's mysteries are, with the hope that it would one day be explained; and when, later, the teaching of Christian Science began to answer so many puzzling questions, the nature or condition of forgiveness was one of the first to be illuminated in this child's maturer experience.

One difference between the Old and the New Testament is that, in the former, most of what is said about forgiveness relates to God's forgiveness of repentant mankind; while in the New Testament much is said about forgiveness between men, as a necessary precedent to divine pardon. Jesus, enunciating the law of divine Love, taught that we must first forgive any whom we think have injured us, before e can be forgiven ourselves. In order to be delivered from the supposed power of evil, we must see its unlikeness to good and its consequent unreality. It is sometimes easy to see this in the abstract; but that is not enough,—we must see it in each specific instance: and we must see, not merely our ewn, but other people's sins to be unreal. "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink: for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head." This characteristic figure of speech illustrates vividly the Christian teaching. When we wish utterly to consume anything that is false and worthless, we put it in the fire, in order that every vestige may be reduced to ashes and utterly destroyed. When the Bible exhorts us to return good for evil, to comfort and sustain one who has apparently given us nothing but enmity and opposition, it teaches us that in ministering to this brother's need, we are heaping so much love upon him that the enmity must be entirely consumed. "Thy God is a consuming fire;" but such a fire can consume only what is mortal and worthless. Whatever is spiritual emerges unharmed from the flame.

"Thou hast set our iniquities before thee, our

"Thou hast set our iniquities before thee, our secret sins in the light of thy countenance," says the psalmist. What happens to these sins when the bright shining of divine Love falls upon them? Just what happens to a piece of ice when it is set in front of the fire. It melts and evaporates; all trace of it vanishes. So does evil vanish before the presence of divine Love, disappearing as darkness before the morning sun. As Mrs. Eddy so clearly states it in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 339), "The destruction of sin is the divine method of pardon." Then there is nothing left to be forgiven. We must refuse to allow evil to enter our thoughts, and devote the time it has hitherto occupied to good. Forgiving must be completed by forgetting! Mrs. Eddy's beautiful chapter on Prayer in Science and Health comforts the reader, as he begins his investigation of the subject of Christian Science, by the assurance of forgiveness. He learns to know when an error in character or conduct is divinely forgiven it is forgiven when we see and realize the good which is its opposite, and accept this reality of good as our own God-given heritage.

But we must take God at His word; we must acknowledge the forgiveness of sin; we must realize that God is "of purer eyes than to behold evil," and that He does not store up memories of sin and sofrow. The prayer for forgiveness, if accompanied by reformation,—the condition of forgiveness,—receives its answer immediately, and must be acted upon gratefully. It is useless merely to implore with beseeching tears for forgiveness. We must believe in the forgiveness of sin, by understanding the allness of good and the unreality of evil. We, then, can be of "good cheer" and "go, and sin no more." Thus each opportunity of forgiving leaves nothing for us to remember but the joy of loving, the peace of reconciliation, the atonement with Truth and Love.

David Lubin's Childhood

Love of adventure was a marked feature in David's character, and far from the depressing influences of his native ghetto, he grew up a bold, fearless, impulsive boy, full of mischief, fond of games and sports, not at all "bookish," yet an insatiable reader of all that came his way and could fire his Imagination or appeal to the poetic idealistic side of his nature. He used to love to watch the great clouds every few minutes, now the embattled castles and fortifications of the fairy tales of which he was so fond, now rushing headlong through the skies like great monsters pursuing one another. He would stand spellbound at the sight, humming tunes of his own invention which seemed to him in keeping with these "huge cloudy symbols of a high romance."

these "huge cloudy symbols of a high romance."

To understand the boy and the influences under which he developed we must say a few words of his mother, for more than by any other factor, the character and mind of David Lubin were shaped by her. ... While she scolded and punished him for his childish misdemeanors, it was she who developed his native idealism by handing on to him the traditions of his people. At her knee David learned the Hebrew psalms and prayers—he had to learn them, and negligence was followed by condign punishment. He used to say that as a child he often looked with longing eyes at the Irish boys of the neighborhood, free to play and fight gloriously in the streets while he had to stay home and memorize the psalms. But this was only one side of his mother's teaching; she was a great hand at telling stories, quaint, shrewd, humorous folklore tales, long imaginative yarns of adventures and travel, as well as Bible stories and the historical traditions of his people, in simple, impressive words which left a mark on the sensitive boy that nothing could efface.

David loved those stories which did far more to develop his mind than the scanty schooling he got, They fed his imagination, carrying him back to the Jewish communities in Russian Poland, and way back further to that Holy Land, that Zion, of which his mother spoke with a devotion and love which made her words glow and her characters live. She told him of the Maccabees, of the wars with the Romans, and of the destruction of Jerusalem, and David made himself a wooden sword which he covered with tin foil and in his games would proudly fancy himself a Jewish hero fighting the Romans single-handed. And then his mother would tell him of the dispersion and of the grievous persecutions that Israel had suffered for his faith, and she would tell David how he had been marked by a sign, set apart for a purpose, and that he was to grow up to be a servant of the Lord, to serve his people and to serve the world. "You will sit at table with Kings," she would say in her quaint figurative language; and the strength of her conviction penetrated deep into the child's soul, sowing seed which could not be stifled by the other side of his life which he lived in the American public school, with American boys, American ideals, American ambitions.

Both in the home and in the school, though in Both in the home and in the school, though in such different tongues, he was taught devotion to an ideal. In the home, by the little mother; it was called "The Lord our Righteousness"; in the school it was America, Liberty, Democracy—and in the boy's heart these came to be one and the same ideal which he, in some mysterious way, had been set apart to serve.—Olivia Rossetti Agresti, in "David Lubin."

Mower and Reaper

Knole - A Great House.

Knole is gentle and venerable. . . . It is, above all, an English house. It has the tone of England; it melts into the green of the garden turf, into the tawnier green of the park beyond, into the blue of the pale English sky; it settles down into its hollow amongst the cushioned tops of the trees; the brownred of those roofs of humble farms and pointed oasthouses, such as stain over a wide landscape the quilt-like pattern of the fields.—V. Sackville-West, in "Khole and the Sackvilles."

In the Monet Corner

When Peter Pan, in Barrie's charming play, asked how many believed in fairyland, he used to receive not only the enthusiastic acclaim of the children in the audience, but a goodly sprinkling of adult hands as well. And this was as it should be. For there is a fairyland that we never outgrow: it is a realm that opens new vistas to us, as childhood's fairyland of Grimm and Andersen fades. To some, it is wafted in on haunting strains of music, to others through the harmonies of Milton and Keats; and to still others in waves of color and light.

Today, in a museum corner the paintings of Claude Monet seem more than any other, to be steeped in the hues of fairyland. Elsewhere we may find colour more intense, more daringly original; but not so evanescent, etherialized, sublimated into the essence of fancy and imagination.

It matters not whether the subject be a fjord, a wheat field, a little coast guard hut, or a deep

It matters not whether the subject be a fjord, a wheat field, a little coast guard hut, or a deep ravine there is in all the characteristic delicacy which Ruskin would call "tenderness." Yet there is no sense of tame monotony. In the picture of the fjord the predominating note is an intense blue-green, edged with banks of snow: in the wheat fields it is golden and red, accentuated by the contrasting blue of the water beyond. The coast guard hut is rose coloured, white sails glimmer in the distance, and red blossoms in the foreground give a sense of freshness hard to describe—a "bright tenderness"; whereas in the Ravine at Creuse there is "grave tenderness" in the richness and warmth of reddish browns, greens, and purples.

"grave tenderness" in the richness and warmth of reddish browns, greens, and purples.

Though all have the ethereal quality, some possess it to a particularly high degree. "Glacons a Bennecourt" is ghostly, mirage-like. In "Bras de Seine près Giverny," there is a soft opalescence of colour—the water is asleep as under an enchanter's wand. And the "Ile sur le Seine," with its shimmering of rose and green and lavender, is even more remote; a glimpse indeed through "magic casements."

casements."
So it is that we cannot spend a half hour with Monet without believing in fairyland, for Monet was not only artist, but poet and dreamer as well. To say that his pictures for this reason are artificial is utterly to miss the point. The fault is wholly in our own dim vision, which fails to perceive the beauty lying in field and hillside and stream, until we are aroused by the Prospero wand of a Monet.

WHEN the State Department has quite recovered from the trepidation into which the demand for the pub-

Mesopotamia, Mosul and Fine Words lication of the precise form of Observer Boyden's remarks threw it, a new problem might be settled by making public exactly what Ambassador Child said, at Lausanne, relative to the attitude of the United States in the Mosul dispute. The Associated Press dispatches from the conference report Ambassador Child as saying:

The American representatives feel it their duty to refer to Lord Curzon's specific mention of the validity of the claims of the Turkish Petroleum Company and to remind the conference that, without seeking special privilege or favor, the Government of the United States has not assented to the principle that it may be dissociated in the rights of peace from the usual consequences of association in war.

That is a very cryptic utterance—"The Government of the United States has not assented to the principle that it may be dissociated in the rights of peace from the usual consequences of association in war."

What are the usual consequences of association in war? The normal and usual consequence is that the parties so associated should join in making a treaty of peace; that they should share equally in the responsibilities and in the benefits to be derived from that treaty. But notwithstanding Ambassador Child's statement, which presumably has the approval of the State Department, the United States emphatically dissociated itself from these consequences. It refused to join in the Treaty of Peace. or to accept any of the responsibilities which the nations so joining took upon themselves. It rather preens itself upon its virtue in not accepting any of the advantages accruing from the peace, such as a share in the reparations which the world faintly hopes that Germany may some time pay, or a slice of the German Colonies taken over by the victors. This self-denial was wholly creditable to the United States. But it appears there are other consequences of the war which it is not ready to set aside so lightly. The one which stirred Ambassador Child to his significant utterance is a share in the oil fields of Mosul. That is a "consequence of peace" invested with potentiality of tremendous profit to a famous corporation in the United States, which has lately been declaring stock dividends running all the way from 100 per cent to 300 per cent. The interests of this corporation have apparently moved the American representative in the conference at Lausanne to a degree of insistence and determination in the assertion of American rights which all the atrocities of Smyrna, and the menace of like barbarities in Thrace were unable to arouse.

A lovely phrase: "The United States has not assented to the principle that it may be dissociated in the rights of peace from the usual consequences of association in war"! It may mean so much, or it may mean so little. In the face of such a ringing declaration as that, the Turk should turn pale, and retire again to the fastnesses of Asia Minor, to which the world thought he had been condemned by defeat in the World War. Dr. Johnson thought Mesopotamia was a noble, mouth-filling word. Mosul, and the oil therein, seem vested with power to fill the mouths of diplomatists with words.

EXPERIENCE, than which there is no more expensive or more convincing teacher, has discredited, somewhat,

The Lion and the Lamb

the oft-expounded warning against putting all one's eggs in a single basket. Years ago the loquacious and philosophical Pudd'n'head Wilson was made to advance the theory that the safer plan was to put all the eggs in one basket, and then to "watch that basket." His philosophy was laughed at by those who regarded themselves as wiser and more sophisticated than he, but there has been a later tendency to think of him as one who possessed a clearness of vision and insight, as one who, had he been less mature, would have been called precocious, one possibly prescient.

Convincing evidence that the old theory is being abandoned is found in the peaceful invasion of Broadway's banking center, "just around the corner from Wall Street," by the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, a powerful and influential unit of American union Labor. The invasion is a peaceful one because it is welcomed and aided by Capital, quite recently and perhaps still, mistakenly regarded as the foe of Labor. Truly it shows that the lion and the lamb can lie down together, safely and peaceably. It opens a new and hitherto untried field of co-operation, whose possibilities are unlimited.

This particular unit of organized Labor has already made successful experiments in co-operative finance, but it is not recorded that it has heretofore entered into so definite an alliance, offensive and defensive, with its oft-declared titular enemy, organized Capital. It is not long ago that agitators throughout the United States were warning everybody against Capital and its alleged selfish aggressions. It was not admitted, even if it was realized, that there could be between Capital and Labor anything like co-operation. And yet how conclusively has the falsity of the agitator's position been proved!

There is being impressed, apparently, a realization that there exists a more than theroretical community of interest which must be protected and safeguarded. Cooperation between Capital and Labor is essential to the prosperity of both, and this is more than a mere theory. The important thing is that a way has been found to effect this co-operation. The process seems to be the simple and convincing one of eliminating false fear. Labor does not pretend, by becoming associated in a great banking enterprise, to dictate the course or policies of Capital, so much as it insists upon the reasonable privilege of directing, concurrently, the uses to which its own savings, converted into the channels of trade and commerce, shall be applied. The constructive uses upon which the representatives of Labor may insist may prove as valuable to organized Capital as the experiences and opportunities which Capital can contribute will prove to Labor. It is encouraging to speculate upon the potential benefits to an industry which has been founded or financed by the co-operation which has been made possible. Its immunity from the aggressions of divided interests and the feuds engendered by the destructive policy of rule or ruin, should be a sufficient assurance against failure in the future.

DEPRIVED of the weapons of warfare—as usually considered—the German people have set about it to combat French military occupation with a campaign of "nongiolent coercion." The problem in the Ruhr would be much less difficult, doubtless, were the German opposition based upon the use of force. But how effectively bayonets can be employed to impose an unwelcome program upon an unarmed but passively resistant population is a question which the French, themselves, might wish to have answered. Nationalistic boycott such as the Germans—hotel proprietors, actors, merchants, farmers, laborers, and students—have instituted against the French is not a new weapon in international conflict. Within the last few days, in fact, a book—"Non-Violent Coercion," by Prof. Clarence Marsh Case of the University of Iowa—has appeared, which deals in its entirety with the history and the interpretation of such movements.

The first concerted action of this kind, according to Professor Case, occurred when the "original proletariat" of Rome, in about 494 B. C., twice marched out of the city and up the Tiber, where they threatened to establish a rival metropolis as a protest against their systematic exploitation at the hands of the patrician profiteers. On both occasions the threat proved effective and brought about the desired reforms.

The industrial boycott, in like manner was employed by the American colonists—particularly in Boston and Philadelphia—against the tax impositions of the British Government. In 1767, for instance, Bostonians agreed together against the English, an agreement which was to be enforced "by discountenancing in the most effectual but decent and lawful manner" all those who failed to cooperate. And in Philadelphia, at the same time, any person who failed to support the boycott was to be stigmatized "an enemy of the liberties of America," and his name published in the newspapers.

Two more recent illustrations of the effective use of this weapon are to be found-one in Hungary and the other in China. The Hungarian story centers about the efforts of the Emperor Franz Josef to subordinate the ancient Hungarian kingdom to the power of Austria. The Hungarians, being unable to fight Austria with the sword, were aroused to passive resistance by Francis Deak, a Roman Catholic landowner who organized a scheme for national education and industry and a boycott of Austria. Thus, "when the Austrian tax collector came to gather the taxes the people did not beat him nor even hoot him-they just declined to pay. The tax collector thereupon called in the Austrian police, and the police seized the man's goods. Then the Hungarian auctioneer declined to auction them and an Austrian auctioneer had to be introduced. When he arrived he discovered that he would have to bring bidders from Austria also if the goods were to be sold." This policy was carried out until "on Feb. 18, 1867, the Emperor Franz Josef capitulated and recognized the constitution and independence of Hungary."

The boycott in China-organized by the students and later supported by the merchants-was directed against the Japanese, following the award of the German rights in Shantung Province to Japan by the allied powers. Throughout the entire country Japanese goods were taboo, and merchants who persisted in selling them were ostracized. In a big department store of Canton, for instance, the proprietor was accused of selling some article "made-in-Japan," and immediately thereafter throngs of clerks were found idle on every floor waiting for the trade that had suddenly ceased to flow. The inmates of the Municipal Reformatory in Shanghai, one morning, disdainfully shoved aside their plates because the fish they were served was Japanese. The populace jeered foreigners who continued to wear Japanese straw hats; Chinese storekeepers in Shantung refused to accept the Japanese military notes of the soldiers in payment for purchases; coolie longshoremen—even hundreds of miles up the Yangtze-refused to unload vessels carrying Japenese goods.

In many places the students secured space in the Chinese papers and printed in long columns lists of the Japanmade goods which the Chinese of each particular community were accustomed to use. In an opposite column a list was printed of Chinese articles which might well be used as a substitute. The boycott did not actually drive the Japanese from Shantung—though it drove many Japanese merchants from China—but it did succeed in arousing the national consciousness of the Chinese people as it had never before been aroused, and it undoubtedly exerted a great influence upon world opinion in swinging it toward China. The total loss to Japanese trade has been placed at $50,000,000, and many of the shops which managed to keep open were enabled to do so only because of subsidies from the home Government.

In the present situation there is much more involved than Franco-German difficulties over reparations. People of many nations—remote from the Rhine—to whom superior military force has meant foreign domination, will watch this struggle in Europe very closely. And pacificists may find much in the conflict to demonstrate the truth of their position.

THERE is world-wide importance in the report that Ismet Pasha, who at first refused to consider the proposition to submit the Mosul dis-

for the League

pute to the arbitration of the League of Nations, has reconsidered that decision, and will attend the Council of the League, in Paris, on Monday, for the purpose of discussing the matter. The Mosul issue between the Turks and the British, in which the United States has professed a certain interest, has as one of its complicating factors the question of access to or control of rich fields of oil. Once nations quarreled and fought for gold. Always they have struggled for the control of markets among primitive peoples. But nowadays the great bone of contention is found in the fields of petroleum, which geologists say are sufficiently well defined to indicate the final limit that will be put upon the production of this fuel.

If the League of Nations can, by consent of the powers involved, be vested with authority to investigate the claims of rival nations to Mosul, one notable forward step toward the maintenance of peace in the world will have been taken. As at present constituted the League would have no authority, nor even the machinery wherewith to enforce its findings, and indeed the report that Ismet may agree to this arbitration also conveys the information that he will only agree, with the reservation that the Turkish Assembly may have the right to reject the findings of the League. In other words, he reserves openly, in advance, the rights of his legislative body as the rights of the United States Senate were reserved, though not wholly openly, when President Wilson represented his Nation at Versailles.

Even this partial recognition, however, of the part to be played by the League of Nations in harmonizing conflicting claims between different governments will have the effect of strengthening that organization. Comparatively few Americans appreciate the extent of the development at Geneva of the Secretariat of the League. It is organized and equipped to conduct precisely such an investigation and arbitration as this. It has at its command the necessary trained minds and all the machinery of investigation. It can undertake such a task at almost a moment's notice, whereas were the League not in existence, months would be required in the organization of a tribunal to which such issues might be submitted.

It is greatly to be hoped that the result of the council at Paris will be the acquiescence of the Turks in the proposition to leave this matter to the League. It is the part of common sense and of civilization. It would go far toward sustaining the contention of the representatives of Islam that they are entitled to a place among civilized nations if they would adopt so intelligent an attitude. It might, perhaps, cause statesmen at Washington to wonder why they alone, or at best only in the partnership of Communistic Russia, should hold sternly aloof from the League of Nations.

CONVINCING figures have been compiled to show that there is a satisfying and substantial profit in reforesting

Forest

Planting

the denuded and barren places in the United States from which have been taken the once thrifty growths of pine, balsam, and spruce. When idealism has been made practicable, and when there is satisfying assurance that the sowing will be followed, sooner or later, by profitable reaping, there is an incentive to undertake the intensely important work which must be done to avert, forty or fifty years hence, an otherwise apparently assured shortage of wood.

Estimates made following careful surveys in New England in those areas where intensive reforestation has been practiced for some years show that the monetary returns from timber-growing, calculated not upon possible future prices nor even upon the very highest prices now quoted, may safely be put at 5 per cent, compounded annually. This computation is made without reference to future exemption or partial exemption of growing forests from taxation, a matter which should be given greater consideration henceforth than has been accorded to it in the past. Certainly it should be provided that he who devotes time, money, and effort to providing a timber supply for the benefit of future generations should not be taxed or penalized for his unselfishness, a generous and thoughtful provision made for those who are to come after him.

One could hardly imagine a more beautiful sight than a vast denuded forest tract thus reclaimed by the slow but certain processes of reforestation. There are uncounted millions of acres of land in the United States, north and south, which would respond immediately to such care and attention. But the expense in time and labor is not inconsiderable, and hand in hand with the work of reclaiming and planting these areas there must be provision made for protecting them against devastation. Despite the precautions now taken it is said that fires each year sweep over many times more acres of cut-over forest lands than all the tree nurseries of the country could supply with plants.

Thus there must be perfected a system of conservation as well as one of reforestation and reconstruction. At present the normal consumption of woods is six times greater than the estimated increase in growth, with the demand becoming larger each year. It requires no very careful calculation to prove the result of such a policy. Heretofore it has perhaps been regarded as a visionary or an altogether altruistic undertaking to attempt the planting of forest trees, but now, with the assurance of an appreciable return in the form of estimated potential values based on the known worth of trees of any age, a growing forest becomes a definite asset immediately. This realization should stimulate a work which heretofore has been undertaken, to say the least, somewhat half-

Editorial Notes

ALTHOUGH Burma, which at the beginning of the year was placed under the Governor-Generalship of Sir Harcourt Butler, has waited two years longer than the rest of India for the measure of autonomy which is thus now begun, it has undoubtedly secured a more liberal scheme than it would have obtained had the change been made at the beginning of 1921. For example, the franchise is far more widespread than in the Indian provinces, the women enjoying equal rights with men in every respect. Then, too, the Forest Administration is being handed over to Burmese ministers. It should be known that the forests are Burma's greatest asset, the area under the control of the department, which is almost entirely state-owned, constituting nearly two-thirds of the province and being capable of much greater development than has yet been attempted. Sir Harcourt has been singularly successful, as Governor of the United Provinces, in procuring the co-operation of the two sides of his Government, the executive and the ministerial. He returns to Burma after five years' absence with the well wishes of many for a like success.

THERE is no doubt that William A. Thompson, director of the bureau of advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, told the truth when he declared recently that the newspaper is the universal advertising medium. When, indeed, it is remembered that there are more than 2000 daily publications in the United States, with a combined circulation of over 29,000,000, it is not difficult to see what an influence for good or evil this agency necessarily wields. There was one phase of his subject, however, to which perhaps insufficient attention was paid, and yet it is a phase which is forcing itself more and more to the forefront of public consciousness, and that is the importance of truth inadvertising. The day, it may be hoped, will soon be here when this medium can no longer be used indiscriminately by charlatans for unscrupulous purposes, and in that day will the newspapers release themselves from one of the strongest influences degrading them from their sphere of highest usefulness.

. + + + A REMARKABLE conclusion which would seem to follow from the well established fact that the present deserts of the world were the centers of vast empires is that the water supply of the various parts of the globe undergoes definite pendulum swings from one section to another. It is well known, for example, that the great peoples of antiquity—the Assyrians, Babylonians, Persians, Phœnicians, Hittites, Egyptians, Carthaginians, Aztecs and Incas—all flourished in lands which are now without sufficient rainfall, but which would easily produce two crops annually, if they had abundant water supply. Then, too, the Sahara is scarred and seamed with old watercourses and the dry beds of lakes, while Sven Hedin and Sir Aurel Stein have reported the presence of extensive ruins, temples, shrines, and mummies in the Gobi deserts of Central Asia. One authority has actually advanced the theory that the world is drying up. But probably there is only one sense in which this theory is true.

THROUGH what appears to have been a mere chance part of a tusk and some teeth of one of the largest species of British elephants were recently saved from an untimely end. Some laborers dig paths of a new kitchen garden in the Deer Park of Magdalen College, Oxford, came across the relics, that is to say, lying in untouched terrace-gravel about four to six feet below the surface of the soil. A casual onlooker ventured to doubt whether the first tusk found was ivory. In reply the digger said: "I will show you that it is ivory," and he immediately proceeded to prove his point by driving his pick into the tusk, breaking it up to make more gravel. Fortunately, attention was drawn to the site before the whole of the other tusk shared the same fate, four molar teeth being found close by. The part of the tusk that was rescued now constitutes a memorial to one of the earliest recorded inhabitants of the college site and is on exhibition in the college library. 4 4 4

Centenaries galore seem to hover around the year 1923, and not the least interesting is to be celebrated in England by a Rugby football match, to witness which it is said that some enthusiasts for sport contemplate making the trip from Australia. The game is to be played in honor of the man who, just a hundred years ago, so the story goes, introduced the "handling code," as it is called in Great Britain. Those who have visited Rugby School during the past twenty years or so may remember having seen a memorial tablet to a certain William Webb Ellis, who, as the tablet puts it, "with a fine disregard for the rules of the game as played in his time, picked up the ball and ran with it." The match is to be-played between a team picked from English and Scottish players and Welsh and Irish players, and will be watched with the keenest interest.

HERE follows a notable sign of these times, as posted on the bulletin board in the editorial rooms of an Indiana newspaper:

To the Staff:

The news and editorial columns of The South Bend Tribune will hereafter treat the prohibition law and the subject of prohibition in a serious and dignified manner. The lightness with which so many newspapers refer to prohibition and prohibition laws is one reason why people take the same view and give the same treatment. Prohibition is the constitutional law of the Nation. It is the duty of every newspaper to uphold the law and to constantly endeavor to create in the people as conscience that will prompt them to be law-abiding. All writers on The Tribune will therefore follow the foregoing policy implicitly.

Truly into the editorial darkness hath the light shined.

IF THERE is one club or association which deserves success it surely is the American Tree Association which has set before it the objective of 1,000,000 trees planted in 1923. And what is more there are no cash dues!
